The Dingle Way

The Dingle Way is one of Ireland's most picturesque and popular long-distance hiking trails, offering stunning coastal views, rugged landscapes, and a rich cultural heritage. It stretches over 179 kilometers (approximately 111 miles) around the Dingle Peninsula in County Kerry, located in the southwest of Ireland. The Dingle Way offers a loop that takes you through charming villages, past ancient sites, and along dramatic cliffs, sandy beaches, and verdant hills.

Day 2: Tralee (Curraheen) to Camp

The hike from Curraheen to Camp Lower is one of the most rewarding stretches of the Dingle Way, offering a perfect blend of pastoral tranquillity, open mountain scenery, and coastal views as you journey westward from the outskirts of Tralee into the heart of the Slieve Mish Mountains. After a short morning transfer from Tralee to Curraheen, the walk begins gently along quiet country lanes framed by stone walls and hedgerows, before gradually rising towards the foothills that define the spine of the Dingle Peninsula.

As you ascend, the rural landscape opens into a patchwork of green fields and rolling uplands, with the ever-present Slieve Mish peaks forming a dramatic backdrop. The path, a mix of grassy tracks and old bog roads, offers expansive views back over Tralee Bay and the Shannon Estuary, often dotted with seabirds and the glint of distant water. The sense of solitude and space is striking here—broken only by the occasional bleating of mountain sheep or the rush of a small stream crossing the trail.

The route then continues westward across open moorland, where the ground can be soft underfoot, before descending gently towards the village of Camp. As you near Camp Lower, the scenery softens once more, returning to rural farmland and quiet lanes that lead into this welcoming small village, the perfect place to rest after a day immersed in the beauty of Kerry's landscapes.

This section is around 12 km (7.5 miles) and takes 3 to 5 hours to complete, with a steady ascent followed by a gradual descent. It's a day that captures the essence of the Dingle Way—contrasting terrain, wide horizons, and the quiet rhythm of rural Ireland unfolding step by step.

This spectacular section of the Dingle Way takes you from Maum na hAltora to Annascaul, crossing some of the most dramatic and varied landscapes on the peninsula. After a short morning transfer to the trailhead at Maum na hAltora—an ancient mountain pass steeped in legend—you'll begin your hike surrounded by wild uplands, where sweeping views stretch across Dingle Bay to the Iveragh Peninsula beyond. The route follows quiet mountain paths and farm tracks that wind down through open countryside, offering a wonderful sense of remoteness and freedom.

As you descend from the pass, the terrain softens and the Atlantic comes into view once more. A highlight of the day is the opportunity to take a detour to Inch Beach, one of Ireland's most iconic stretches of sand. Its vast, three-mile expanse invites you to stroll along the shoreline, breathe in the sea air, or even take a refreshing swim in the clear waters of Dingle Bay—a perfect way to energise body and soul before continuing on your journey.

Leaving the coast behind, the final leg of the hike follows quiet lanes and grassy trails inland towards the charming village of Annascaul, famous as the birthplace of Antarctic explorer Tom Crean. The village's cosy pubs and warm hospitality offer a well-earned rest after a rewarding day on the trail.

After a short morning transfer from Annascaul to Lispole, your walk begins on peaceful boreens and rural lanes surrounded by lush farmland, with the jagged peaks of the Slieve Mish Mountains rising to the east.

As you gain height on gentle slopes, the landscape opens out to reveal panoramic views across Dingle Bay and the broad sweep of the surrounding hills. The trail follows a mixture of old farm tracks and grassy paths through sheep-dotted uplands, often accompanied by the soothing sound of distant streams and the call of skylarks overhead. Nearing Dingle, the route descends steadily with breathtaking vistas over the town, its colourful waterfront houses glimmering beside the deep blue bay.

This is an especially enjoyable walk for those who like a mix of rural tranquillity and a lively finish. The final stretch winds into Dingle town, renowned for its rich culture, traditional music, artisan shops, and excellent seafood restaurants. Whether you're ready for a pint of Guinness, a browse through local craft shops, or a stroll along the marina, Dingle offers a vibrant contrast to the quiet countryside you've just traversed.

Day 5: Dingle (Fahan) to Dunquin

The hike from Fahan to Dunquin is often described as one of the most breathtaking sections of the entire Dingle Way, where every step reveals a new sweep of ocean, island, and mountain. After a morning transfer from Dingle to the small hamlet of Fahan, your walk begins amid ancient stone beehive huts and early Christian sites that speak to centuries of settlement on this wild Atlantic coast. The path soon climbs gently onto the slopes of Mount Eagle, offering stunning panoramas across Sleat Head, the Blasket Islands, and the endless horizon of the Atlantic Ocean.

The trail follows a mix of quiet lanes, grassy tracks, and clifftop paths that hug the coastline, each turn offering yet another postcard-perfect view. To your right, the vast Atlantic stretches westward; to your left, patchwork fields and low stone walls reflect generations of rural life. The scenery here is raw, elemental, and deeply moving — where sea, sky, and land merge in a harmony that defines the Dingle Peninsula.

As you descend towards Dunquin, the westernmost village in Ireland, the majestic Blasket Islands dominate the view, their rugged silhouettes rising dramatically from the sea. Your walk finishes at the Blasket Islands Interpretative Centre, a beautifully designed space that tells the story of the islanders who once lived and thrived on the edge of Europe. After time to explore the centre, you'll be collected and transferred back to Dingle for your overnight stay, where you can unwind and reflect on one of the most inspiring days of your journey.

This hike covers approximately 11 km (7 miles) and takes around 4–6 hours to complete, with steady climbs and spectacular coastal walking throughout

Day 6: Dingle (Droichead Bán) to Cloghane

The hike from Droichead Bán to Cloghane is one of the most dramatic and rewarding stages of the Dingle Way, taking you over the shoulder of Mount Brandon, Ireland's second-highest peak, and into the lush valley below. This is a day of contrasts — wild, open mountain landscapes giving way to tranquil green fields and a welcoming coastal village.

After a morning transfer to the small settlement of Droichead Bán, the trail begins with a steady climb on old farm tracks and bog roads, gradually ascending into the heart of the Brandon Mountains. The air grows fresher and the views expand with every step — sweeping panoramas across Brandon Bay, the Maharees, and the distant Slieve Mish range. As you approach the high point of the trail, near Mas an Tiompáin (the Saddle), the sense of remoteness and majesty is profound; this ancient pilgrim route is part of the famed Saint's Road, traditionally followed by those ascending Mount Brandon in centuries past.

From here, the path descends steeply into a broad, glacial valley with the picturesque village of Cloghane visible far below. The descent offers magnificent views of the surrounding mountains and Brandon Bay, with its vast stretches of sand and shimmering light. Arriving into Cloghane, you'll find a warm welcome in this charming Gaeltacht community — a peaceful spot framed by river, sea, and mountain.

This section covers approximately 11.5 km (7 miles) and takes 4 to 6 hours to complete, with a demanding ascent and descent over high mountain terrain. It's a day for confident walkers who relish wild scenery, solitude, and the satisfaction of crossing one of Ireland's most iconic mountain passes.

Day 7: Cloghane (Fermoyale) to Maharees

The hike from Fermoyale to the Maharees is a wonderfully invigorating coastal walk, offering a complete change of scenery as the Dingle Way leaves the mountains behind and follows one of Ireland's longest stretches of continuous beach. After a morning transfer to Fermoyale Strand, your walk begins with your feet on golden sand and the sound of the Atlantic surf beside you — an unforgettable way to start the day.

This stage is defined by the sea: an easy, flat walk along Trá an Fhíona and Brandon Bay, with the Slieve Mish Mountains rising to your left and the vast ocean stretching endlessly to your right. The route covers nearly 10 km of beach walking, a serene and meditative experience where the rhythm of the waves accompanies each step. Along the way, you may spot windsurfers, seabirds, or even seals basking near the shore.

As you approach the Maharees Peninsula, the scenery changes again — long dunes, sea grasses, and the glimmer of sandy causeways linking small islands that reach out into the bay. The area is famous for its unspoiled beauty and marine life, with views across to Ballycurrane and the scattered Blasket Islands on a clear day. It's a peaceful and refreshing end to your walk, with the sea air and open horizon leaving you feeling renewed.

This section typically covers around 14 km (8½ miles) and takes 4 to 5 hours to complete at a relaxed pace. It's an easy, low-level walk compared to the mountain sections before it — ideal for soaking up the coastal beauty of West Kerry.
